

Cuts to higher education are killing job creation.

Washington is already near the bottom for states producing four-year university graduates. When is enough enough? Our higher-education system is essential to job creation and long-term prosperity for our state. It is also the best investment the state can make for economic growth. But Olympia has chronically disinvested in the system, creating a downward spiral that will undermine economic productivity and job creation for years to come.

Since 2007, investment in higher education by the state has been cut by 28%, and another $360 million of cuts have been proposed. That's nearly a 50% cut in state funding in just four years. Don't sit by and watch Olympia gut our higher-education system, which is a key source of prosperity for Washington.
